Net Interest Margin

- During 2016, net interest margin (NIM) was impacted by:
  - Increased funding costs associated with a higher proportion of Federal Home Loan Bank medium-term borrowings and lower earning asset yields
  - Average loan rates declined due to the low interest rate environment, lower spreads on existing loan repricing, and competitive new loan pricing
- NIM improvement over last few quarters has resulted from a combination of our balance sheet remix strategy, the YCB acquisition, and recent Federal Reserve Board's target federal funds rate increases
  - Positioned for asset sensitivity in a rising interest rate environment
  - Competitive pressures continue on loan pricing and non-pricing terms
  - Decline in yield curve over last few months provides NIM expansion headwind

Interest Rate Sensitivity

- Positioned for asset sensitivity in rising rate shock and ramp environments

Immediate Change in Interest Rates	Change in Net Interest Income from Base over One Year

Diversified Revenue Generation: Non-Interest Income

- Operating non-interest income contributed 24% of net revenue during Q2 2017 year-to-date

  - Other income declined due to the prior year including higher commercial customer loan swap income related to a larger project
